

Personocratia's Path

They Had Many Children and Lived Happily Ever After

Both of us - Ghis (3 girls and 1 boy) and Mado (1 girl and 2 boys) - became dedicated mothers, despite our determination to remain childless. What happened? The animal program was stronger than our resolve. We both dived into our roles with passion, but chose two opposite methods of mothering – modern (Ghis) and primitive (Mado). Surprisingly, the results were similar, since the influence of today's society on children is stronger than any dreams parents may have. Early family programming is quickly buried underneath subsequent layers called schooling, television, movies, music, Internet, drugs, and friends.

Giving Birth Is Photocopying

Mammals kill and eat abnormal babies right after they are born. The survival program of animal species specifies that offspring need to be perfect if they are to live and reproduce. Yet, with Homo sapiens, not only do all babies have the legal right to live, but all adults have the obligation to reproduce, whatever their physical or psychological condition. The pressure exerted by family, the media, and society as a whole becomes such that an adult who refuses to have children is considered a traitor. Making babies becomes a genetic and patriotic duty.

At the same time, the human environment has never contained so many mutagenic substances: pesticides, food additives, vaccines, nuclear radiation, GMOs, chemtrails, etc. These cause genetic anomalies that are automatically transmitted to future generations. Giving birth means photocopying genes. Everyone knows that when a photocopy gets reproduced again and again, its quality decreases every time. Because of the poor quality of their genes, most men and women should actually be banned from making babies!

After a baby is born, she needs protection, warmth, food, clothing, and education. All this is expensive. Consequently, one expects the rich to have more children than the poor. Yet, the reverse is true! As the saying goes, "the rich get the money and the poor get the baby". For instance, in Afghan camps, each woman gives birth to an average of 14 children. This may seem illogical, but it fits the biological program perfectly. The more precarious the survival, the fiercer becomes the urge to reproduce. This is Nature's way of ensuring the perpetuation of a species.

A Twenty-Year Prison Sentence

Why would one want to start a family? Most people do so without ever asking this question. Animality is the only thing that pushes someone in this direction. In the 21st century, who can afford to choose 20 years of prison instead of 20 years of evolution of consciousness? Those who do show a total lack of awareness about what our future holds!

So, you think that you can have both family and transformation? Be aware that a mother actually has four jobs: 1) mothering her children; 2) keeping her couple (to get affection); 3) taking care of the larger family (grandparents, uncles/aunts); 4) having a successful career. As for the father, his priorities are different: 1) keeping his couple (to get sex); 2) having a successful career; 3) being a good father; 4) taking care of the larger family. It is very hard to do well four things at a time, so most people concentrate on one or two. In general, a woman's career reaches a maximum just before she starts a family and a man's career takes a leap forward after his first baby – money, responsibilities, and work hours.

The majority of parents are overwhelmed by their role and feel they are incapable of educating their children properly. So, they place them into the hands of specialists who corrupt them for life. Babysitters, nannies, teachers, and coaches can only show them the lies they learned in school and the media, and turn them into faithful slaves of the elite. The behaviour of today's teenagers and young adults can only confirm the poor results of this approach. If I decide to have children, I must devote time, energy, and money to their care and share a deep friendship with them. If I decide otherwise, it is best not to have any babies! In fact, being a parent is a full-time, 20-year commitment.

Primitive versus Modern Mothering

To raise a child properly, a mother needs to be available and trust her instinct. Her DNA will guide her actions as well as in any other mammalian species. However, human beings are weird animals. As they possess large brains to pick up thoughts from the mental worlds, and thin hips that help them walk on two legs, their babies are born prematurely, at the foetal stage, so that their skulls can fit inside the birth canal. They are born weak and clumsy and cannot hold on to their mothers like baby monkeys do. Therefore, a human mother must carry her baby until the child is able to move alone rapidly, when she is two years old or more.

Human DNA specifies that a baby should have constant physical contact with her mother in order to be stimulated at all times via touch, smell, sound, and movement. An infant has no notion of time and eagerly awaits the reassuring comfort of her mother. If it does not come, she cries loudly and incessantly at first. When she gets exhausted and loses all hope of being comforted, she gives up. From birth onward, she goes through a series of shocks, each triggering a special biological program. Her inherent potential to be happy and healthy is sabotaged for life. She becomes disillusioned, aggressive, sickly, and resigned.

Elite-educated specialists have made sure to destroy the mother/baby link. Why? It is because this lack of connection creates fearful human beings who yearn for saviours (spouse, boss, specialist, state) for their entire lives. Perfect citizens! Since WWII, the elite has encouraged mothers to work out of the home. It knew that placing a child in day-care means making an orphan out of her. Here are the most common long-term effects of living in an orphanage: 1) atrophied, sickly ⇒ physical body; 2) vital body three times more prone to emotional problems (anger, depression, anxiety); 3) lesser-developed mental body (backwardness, lower IQ).

Finally, as children learn mainly by imitation, if modern adults live only to fulfil their desires and lust, their offspring will mimic such behaviour and attach great value to money, possessions, and hypersexualisation (clothing, dancing, gestures, expressions, attitudes, pornography). What a sad kind of society this makes!

Child Sexuality

Mind-control specialists from the Tavistock Institute have discovered that the early eroticisation of children automatically brings about lifelong retardation. The more intense and precocious the sexual stimulation of a child, the more chances her intellectual and emotional capacities have to remain at the level of a neurotic, easily-manipulated child. To obtain such a result in the larger population, the elite uses the mass media and the educational system. Simultaneously, it works to destroy the family and the parent-child relationship. Thanks to such efforts, the State is now the new, happy parent of a big family of childish, stupid, paranoid citizens. That is why sex is the dominant message in the media. Nowadays, even schools are involved. For example, in Switzerland and Germany, sex education starts in kindergarten. Officially, their intention is to destroy taboos and favour sexual freedom by painting in a favourable light artificial insemination, surrogate mothers, homosexuality, bisexuality, transsexuality, and paedophilia. Heterosexuality and the traditional family are presented as outmoded.

Children and the Media

The worlds of media and publicity go hand in hand. Our children are bombarded with 3,000 commercials per day. This takes place during daytime (television, music, school, Internet, buses, stores, streets, clothing, cereal boxes) and at night (bed sheets, toys, pyjamas). Efficiently programmed into lifelong consumers, children turn towards parents and pester them for all they have been told they should own. In the USA, since 1984, child marketing has no more legal limit. Since then, child consumption has increased by 35% every year, going from $4.2 billion in 1984 to $40 billion in 2008. Our children have become the disciples of a new cult based on materialism, navel-gazing, and instantaneous gratification.

Acknowledging Failure

Nowadays, being a parent is no picnic. When facing such a challenge, many adopt an authoritarian attitude based on a religious or moral code coming from previous generations – spare the rod, spoil the child. Their children either become good, obedient white sheep who perpetuate the family prison, or rebellious black sheep – artists, bandits, explorers, drug addicts, and other adventurers of nonconformism. Some parents go in the opposite direction and use the enfant-roi (child-king) program. Their children become their whole life. Permissive, inconsistent, undisciplined, they bring up irresponsible, unstable, vile offspring. Once adults, they are more inclined to alcohol, drug abuse, early sex – and, as a consequence, early parenting.

In the 21st century, all child-rearing methods are bound to fail. Whether it is the state producing robot-like citizens, strict parents who train high-performance children, or soft-spoken parents who only wish to make their progeny happy, the result remains repeatedly unacceptable. All attempts end up in failure. To find the solution, we must go to the root of the problem. In reality, humanity is a transitory species between animality and idessity*. This uncomfortable and painful transition forces human beings to leave their now-obsolete programs behind. Let us realise that the human family is on the verge of extinction. Trying to come back nostalgically to time-proven methods or putting all hopes on technological feats are both bound for failure. The pain and suffering that human families are now facing must be seen for what they are – an evolutionary necessity!
